About

I'm currently at Modular, where we're working to democratize machine learning by building flexible and efficient infrastructure for heterogenous computation.

Formerly, I was a member of the Swift for TensorFlow team at Google, exploring how machine learning could be advanced by integrating first-class support for differentiability into the Swift language. Many items we built there, such as differentiable Swift, live on in open source. I carried on that work at PassiveLogic, building Swift-based machine learning systems for optimizing complex control systems.

PassiveLogic's autonomous control systems rely on physics-based models to achieve efficient control of intricate systems on the path to significantly reducing energy demand globally
