About

Pierre Arnaud is a long-time software enthusiast who likes to consider himself as a craftsman.

As a kid, he wrote programs on a mechanical typewriter, imagining what the computer would do with his BASIC programs. In 1982, he bought his first 8-bit CPU (RCA 1802) which he programmed in binary, by toggling switches.

In 1984, he discovered the Smaky at the local school and started experimenting with new programming languages, such as PASCAL, LOGO, PROLOG, etc.

On Christmas 1985 he received a Commodore 128D from his parents, on which he developed his first real applications: a drawing program, followed the next year by a text processor.
